EICHMANN TRIAL HEARS BARON PINHAS VON FREUDIGER, WHITE-BEARDED NOBLEMAN, FORMER HEAD OF ORTHODOX JEWS OF BUDAPEST, OPEN TESTIMONY ON HUNGARIAN EPISODE OF ONE-HALF MILLION DEATHS IN NINE MONTHS

A Nazi diplomat reported in 1944 that Hitler had agreed to permit 7,000 Jews in Budapest to migrate to Palestine, but that Adolf Eichmann objected strenuously.

The diplomat was Edmund Veesenmayer, Reich Plenipotentiary in Hungary. The statement was in a cablegram to the German Foreign Office from Budapest dated July 25, 1944, says the New York Herald Tribune. A photostatic copy of the cable is in the hands of the prosecution in the case of "The Attorney General vs. Adolf, the son of Adolph Karl Eichmann."

Veesenmayer, known for his detailed and accurate reports, was referring to a Swiss-sponsored plan to rescue 7,000 Budapest Jews from the Nazi deportation machine which had swept up 380,000 Hungarian Jews in the preceding two months. The cable was dispatched at a time when the Hungarian puppet government, heeding appeals from the West, was attempting to stop the deportations.

Eichmann, according to Veesenmayer, said he could not believe that S.S. Gestapo Chief Heinrich Himmler knew of the Hitler agreement. He proposed informing Himmler of the plan and said he would, if necessary, go to Hitler himself about the matter.

The head of the Gestapo's Jewish Section, the cable added, also warned that he would attempt to forestall any further efforts to evacuate Jews to countries beyond the Nazi reach.

The evidence in the cable fits in with the Israeli theory that Eichmann was no "little cog" in the Nazi extermination machinery, as he described himself in his published memoirs, but a man of powerful influence dedicated to exterminating the Jews of Europe.

A small cog, it has been speculated, would have proposed reporting to his immediate superior, Gestapo Commander Heinrich Mueller, and not to Himmler, the second most powerful man in the Reich; nor would a little cog dare to threaten to go to the Fuehrer.

Further, Veesenmayer's cable would appear to clash with Eichmann's excuse that throughout the genocidal period he "acted on orders." The defense attorney, Dr. Robert Servatius, has said that Eichmann would admit facts in court but plead not guilty, says the New York Herald Tribune. The apparent implication was that Eichmann would admit having carried out such-and-such an action but plead that he did so under instruction.

In assembling evidence of Eichmann's role in the Nazi murder of millions of Jews, Israel has expended an awesome amount of energy. Within days after Eichmann's arrest last May, the National Police set up Bureau O-6, a special unit to gather and process the evidence for the prosecution.

Bureau O-6 worked at top speed for nearly ten months. Although it finally concluded its assignment for the trial, its director said that such a task "cannot ever really be completed." The "scene of the crime," Police Commander Avraham Selinger explained, was virtually the whole of Europe; the time involved was the period between Hitler's rise to power in January, 1933, and the Nazi capitulation in April, 1945.

The officers of Bureau O-6 bored through a vast amount of documentary material, including the millions of words in the minutes of the Nurnberg Trials. The Bureau sent agents to various Western countries for evidence. East European countries, where so much of the tragedy of Jewry occurred, did not welcome visiting investigators, but Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia sent important documents.

Russia and Romania did not respond to Israel's request for material. Bulgaria — with probable truthfulness since the Nazis failed to exterminate the Bulgarian Jewish community — said it had nothing of interest.

The Bureau interviewed scores of potential witnesses. Victims of Nazism around the world volunteered depositions which were taken at the nearest Israeli embassy.

Bureau O-6 had one piece of extremely good fortune. The Gestapo, including Eichmann's own branch, had destroyed its records, and many other archives were burned by the Nazis near the war's end, says the New York Herald Tribune. Three hundred tons of Foreign Office documents, however, were captured by the British.

These documents were later returned to West Germany, but long before that the Israelis arranged to examine them and microfilm 250,000 pages of Jewish interest. The film was deposited in the archives of Yad Vashem, the public body established under Israel law to memorialize Jews killed by the Nazis, and became a major source of Bureau O-6's documentation.

From the mountain of material from many countries the officers of Bureau O-6 and the prosecution selected nearly 1,500 documents and affidavits for use in the case. The police officers-turned-historians also prepared comprehensive "horizontal" surveys tracing the anti-Jewish campaign of the Nazis — and of Eichmann — in every occupied country in Europe. Bureau O-6 assembled a dozen "vertical" surveys, each dealing with a specific crime or field of action which cut across national boundaries.

From all this the prosecution fashioned a fourteen-page, fifteen-count indictment accusing Eichmann of crimes against the Jewish people and against humanity. The charges range from the organization of economic boycott to the uprooting of 14,000 Slovene Christians, but the heart of the indictment is the charge that Eichmann helped to kill millions of Jews and that he did so "with the intention of destroying the Jewish people."

The mass murder, according to the indictment, began with the outbreak of World War II. Eichmann is accused of working in co-ordination with the notorious Einsatzgruppen (operational groups), or murder squads, which followed the invading German Army into Poland and later into the Baltic States and Russia.

The murder squads, according to testimony at Nurnberg, usually operated by rounding up Jewish residents of a town or village, transporting them to a place of execution (such as an anti-tank ditch or pit) and shooting them, says the New York Herald Tribune. The Eichmann indictment charges the Einsatzgruppen killed hundreds of thousands of Jews, and adds:

"These groups operated in the main on the Sabbath and Jewish Festivals, which days were selected for the slaughter of Jews."

The murder squads worked only in Eastern Europe, and their methods were relatively inefficient, so a much more sweeping program was put into effect.

Eichmann was among some fifteen representatives of various ministries and of the S.S. who attended a meeting in January, 1942, to discuss implementation of "the final solution of the Jewish problem."

The term, Eichmann has said in his memoirs, meant "liquidation." The Israeli indictment charged that Eichmann was the person responsible for the execution of this "Nazi plan for the physical extermination of the Jews."

Full implementation of "the final solution" involved the deportation of Jews from the corners of Europe to concentration camps in the East, principally in Poland. The work swiftly gained tempo. By June, six months after the "final solution" meeting, Eichmann was writing to the Foreign Ministry that deportation trains, each with 1,000 Jews, would be sent daily from the West and would transport a total of 40,000 Dutch Jews, 40,000 French Jews, and 10,000 Belgian Jews.

Eichmann has admitted that he was responsible for the deportation of Europe's Jews to the camps. But in his memoirs he claimed that he "never had anything directly to do with the gas chambers" and that he never gave "a single annihilation order." Not so, according to the indictment.

The indictment specifically accuses Eichmann of directing the commanders of the Auschwitz concentration camp to use Zyklon B, the poison gas which caused the deaths of millions, says the New York Herald Tribune. The indictment further charges that Eichmann obtained the gas in 1942 and 1944 to exterminate Jews at Auschwitz.

Eichmann's participation in "the final solution" also included, according to the lengthy indictment, efforts to prevent Jews from having children. It relates that he instructed the Jewish Council of Elders at the relatively civilized Theresienstadt concentration camp to forbid births and to interrupt pregnancy "by artificial abortion in all cases and in all stages of pregnancy."

The same count charges that Eichmann joined in devising measures for the sterilization of children.

In drawing up the case against Eichmann, Israeli officials noted that he operated under cover most of the time, rarely showed himself. In Hungary, however, it was different.

When Eichmann and his work reach Budapest in March, 1944, Hungary was officially a Nazi ally, although a shaky one. To achieve his goal, he had to maintain constant contact with the Hungarian Interior Ministry, and thus operate in the open for the first time.

He was head of the "Eichmann Special Operations Unit" there. The Russians were advancing, the Hungarians put obstacles in his way, the Western Allies and the Swiss tried to save Jews. Himmler sought to bargain with Jewish lives. Yet, according to the indictment, Eichmann caused the killing of some 500,000 Hungarian Jews in the succeeding nine months.

Eichmann dealt in terms of hundreds of thousands. Did he also exercise control over individuals? The captured Foreign Office documents included a letter signed by Eichmann rejecting a proposal to permit the emigration of a Dutch Jewish professor of law against payment of a substantial gransom in badly needed foreign currency. Another letter showed him turning down the emigration of two Viennese professors of medicine and music to Afghanistan.

And then there is the voluminous diary of Jochen Klepper, devout German Lutheran, historical novelist, mystical poet, says the New York Herald Tribune. It is said Klepper never intended his diary for publication, but it came out in Germany in 1956, fourteen years after his death.

Klepper was married to a Jewish widow who had two daughters. As the Nazi noose tightened around the Jews of Germany, the older step-daughter was able to emigrate shortly before the war. Klepper worked ceaselessly to arrange the emigration of his second step-daughter, aged twenty, and of his wife (who had meantime converted to Christianity). Late in 1942 he obtained a Swedish visa for the girl, and then went to see Interior Minister Wilhelm Frick, with whom he had influence, for an exit visa — only to be told that the Ministry no longer had the power to permit emigration and that he must go to the S.S. Security Service.

There Klepper saw Eichmann, who seemed encouraging and, is reported to have said, "I have not yet given my final yes. But I think the matter will be arranged."

The next day, as he was told to do, Klepper returned to the Security Service. The diary does not say what happened there, but the entry continued: "Tonight we shall go to our common death. Above us, in the last hours, there is the picture of the Blessed Christ which envelops us. In its sight comes the end of our lives."

There the diary ends.

Last month every seat in the courtroom in Jerusalem was filled and crowds milled in the corridors outside when the prosecution called its first witness on Hungary — a white-bearded nobleman who once headed the Orthodox Jewish community in Budapest, says the New York Herald Tribune.

Baron Pinhas von Freudiger told how Eichmann had frustrated an attempt by the Hungarian Regent, Admiral Nicholas Horthy, to halt deportations to Auschwitz in July 1944. He recalled how the aged Regent, badly frightened by an ultimatum from the United States Secretary of State, Cordell Hull, which had been followed by a heavy air raid on Budapest, ordered a deportation train halted en route to Auschwitz.

The Budapest Jewish leaders had succeeded in informing the outside world of the extermination machine the Nazis had set up in the spring of 1944.

In the forty-day period from May 15 to July 5 Eichmann shipped 600,000 Jews to Auschwitz, the witness said. The report of 1,400,000 deaths at that camp based on the accounts of two who escaped had reached the West by way of Jewish committees in Bratislava and Budapest.

Secretary Hull delivered a sharp note through the Swiss legation June 26, 1944, threatening reprisals against those responsible for the deportations. The Baron continued his testimony: "As far as we knew, the ultimatum expired on the twenty-ninth or thirtieth of June and the Hungarian Government did not reply at all.

"And then on the second of July there was an air raid on Budapest, a very strong air raid in the very early hours of morning by American and British planes. There were about 500 casualties among the population of Budapest, among them many Jews. Our house was hit by a bomb and my cousin was killed. On the next day Horthy gave assurances there would be no more deportations."

By that time Hungary was almost free of Jews except for about 150,000 remaining in Budapest, the Baron said. He said that a struggle ensued between Admiral Horthy and Eichmann over the fate of these Jews, says the New York Times.

There's No Business Like Shul Business

BY MARTIN PANZER

"I just been appointed to the Nominations Committee of the Temple," said Borah. "Deal the cards," said Abel. "Every time the cards go against you, you start changing the subject."

"Listen," said Borah, "when I'll have to come to you for pinochle lessons, that will be the day. I'm not changing the subject. I'm dealing. And while I'm dealing, I'm talking." As he spoke he drifted into his beloved singsong.

"It seems to me," Pincus broke in, "that you kind of dragged in the subject by the heels, whether you are changing the subject or whether you are not changing the subject. Is there perhaps some point to what you said?"

"Sure there's a point to it," said Abel, sorting his cards. "The point is that he's trying to tell you that he's becoming a big shot at the Temple."

Borah's eyes flashed, partly in resentment and partly because it was obvious that the three old cronies were about to meet head on in one of these arguments that were the breath of life to them and which, if they but knew it, were perhaps the raison d'être for their weekly pinochle sessions. "As usual," he said, trying to make his voice sound as though he was trying to restrain his wrath, "you are 100% wrong, and the reason you're only 100% wrong is because 100% is maximum."

"I bid three hundred," said Pincus.

"Three-ten," said Abel. "And now, great mathematician of percentage points, tell me — why am I 100% wrong?"

"You remember we're playing double bait double spades," said Borah.

"For a three-ten bid you have to remind me of this? Tell me why I'm 100% wrong."

"Three-fifty," said Borah, as the other two exchanged meaningful glances. "The reason I mentioned that I have been appointed to the Nominations Committee is because it probably means no more pinochle. Anybody for three-sixty?"

Consternation was clearly written on the faces of the other two players. "Are you out of your mind?" demanded Pincus. "What's this got to do with that?"

"Yes," Abel chimed in, "what's that got to do with this?"

"This and that or that and this," said Borah richly, "the reason is that I'm already on eight other committees and this one will take away my last free evening, when you consider that Friday night I have to go to shul for religious reasons."

"You mean you are now on nine committees?" said Abel, putting his cards down. The game could wait. The debate was now assured. The others, too, rested their cards. "I didn't think we had that many. I'm on four myself, but still. . ."

"I'm on five," Pincus interrupted.

"And not one of us is on a committee that another one is on," said Abel. "How can that be? I myself am already on the Insurance Committee, the Cemetery Committee, the Personnel Committee and the Charity Committee."

"And I," said Pincus, "am on the Building Committee, the High Holiday Ticket Committee, the Catering Committee, the Fund-raising Committee; and the Endowment Committee. So tell me, Borah, how could you possibly be on nine committees if you aren't on even a single one of those that have heretofore been mentioned?"

"Please, Pincus," said Borah with a pained expression on his face, "for one night at least stop with the big words." He reached into his pocket and drew forth a little notebook. "Frankly," he said, with an embarrassed grin, "I'm on so many committees that I find it a little hard to remember them all. Fortunately, I get a card in the mail every time there's a meeting. Otherwise every night I might go to the wrong meeting."

"Again you are changing the subject," objected Abel.

Borah smiled tolerantly, secure in the unassailability of his position. "My, we are impatient tonight," he said softly. "Here, listen, here are the committees I am on in addition to the Nominating Committee: I am on the Youth Committee, the Education Committee, the Membership Committee, the Budget Committee, the Publicity Committee, the House Committee, the Entertainment Committee, and the Religious Committee. And I am proud to say I have never turned down an appointment to any committee except the Delinquency Committee. To chase after delinquents is simply not in my line."

"I forgot," said Abel. "I'm also on the Board of Directors. I took it because I had already turned down the Speakers Committee and I couldn't get out of it."

Pincus shook his head slowly

Temperatures: Daytime – between 78 and 82°. Nights – pleasantly breezy at around 70°. This goes for all the Southern islands...and the humidity is always low, of course.

Shopping: If you like bargains, you'll find them. Local handicrafts, for one. Clothes of all kinds. Silver filigree work – gorgeous! But you'd better look yourself.

Sports: Just anything goes. Crystal clear waters to sail on, swim in, dive under. Golf, fishing, tennis – you name it, you'll find it in the Caribbean.

For a real change, go south this summer. Best way to start: see your Travel Agent or TCA and pick up some booklets!

Happy Holiday!

MONTREAL MARRIAGES

SILVERSTONE-WITTENBERG

The marriage of Miss Alice Sandra Wittenberg, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel M. Wittenberg, 758 Lexington Avenue, to Herschel William Silverstone, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Silverstone, 838 Pratt Avenue, was solemnized at Shaar Hashomayim Synagogue, on June 1, at six o'clock, by Rabbi Wilfred Shuchat, assisted by Reverend J. J. Fromm. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She was gowned in white Guipure lace and peau de soie. The fitted bodice had a scalloped neckline; and elbow-length sleeves; and the bouffant skirt, fashioned with unpressed pleats, was appliqued with the lace. Her veil of tulle illusion was caught to a coronet of the same lace and seed-pearl-beads; and she carried a prayer book covered with white orchids and stephanotis. Miss Carol Wittenberg, as maid of honour for her sister, was in a gown of blue taffeta; with a fitted bodice; portrait neckline; and a full skirt. She wore a blue headdress; and carried a cascade bouquet of roses and blue-tinted carnations. Martin Park acted as best man. The ushers were: Gerald Constant, Allan Entous, Mish Granick, Gerald Nudelman, Gerald Shetinky, Howard Wittenberg, and Bernard Zaitlin. Standards of mixed summer flowers were the decorations. Mrs. M. N. Fineberg played the wedding music. Mrs. Wittenberg, the bride's mother, wore a gown of blue peau de soie; with a hat of the same shade. Mrs. Silverstone, mother of the groom, was gowned in blue chiffon; with a hat to match it. Their corsages were of orchids. Mr. and Mrs. Herschel William Silverstone spent their wedding trip in New York; and Bermuda. Here for the marriage were: Mr. and Mrs. Philip Wittenberg, Mr. and Mrs. H. Silverstone, Mrs. J. Jacobs, Steven Jacobs, and Mr. and Mrs. William Heffner; of New York; Mr. and Mrs. A. Ansel, of Toronto, Ont.; Mrs. Charles Kuperamith, of Chicago, Ill.; and Dr. and Mrs. L. Wainer, of Burlington, Vermont.

"Eichmann insisted that the final solution (the killing of all Jews) be carried out to the end and that the Budapest Jews must also be deported," the witness said.

He said he had learned this from two sources, from men close to Admiral Horthy and from Maj. Dieter Wisliceny, an Eichmann aide.

Contemptuous of the Regent, Eichmann planned to ship 1,500 Jews to Auschwitz from the Vistarcsa camp near Budapest, the witness testified. The Jewish committee heard of this and got word to Admiral Horthy through his son. The Regent ordered the death train returned to Vistarcsa.

"We received a telephone call from a Hungarian police officer — one of the good non-Jews — that his 'Jews,' as he put it, had returned," he said. "There was great rejoicing among the Jews of Budapest."

But a few days later Eichmann's men returned to the camp, the witness said. They virtually imprisoned the Hungarian policemen, packed the Jews into trucks and drove off. Near the Slovak frontier a death train was waiting, he said, and the Jews were taken to the gas chambers at Auschwitz.

Later Major Wisleney told Baron Freudiger: "You didn't think Eichmann would take a slap in the face from the old idiot (Admiral Horthy) did you?"

This was not the last death train. Within a week 280 hostages who had been held at Vistarcsa were deported with other Jews to Auschwitz.

The story of the final train was told by Dr. Alexander Brodi, a former member of the Hungarian Parliament who now lives in Sao Paulo, Brazil. Dr. Brodi, a heavily jowled man, testified so vehemently that his huge frame quivered. He said that he had been at Vistarcsa when the final deportation was arranged and that Capt. Fritz Nowak, Eichmann's transport officer, had ordered him taken along as a "troublemaker." However, a friendly Hungarian guard let him escape, he said.

Pathetic messages dropped from a death train were read by another witness, Mrs. Margot Reich had many spectators weeping as she read in a trembling voice a postcard message her husband had thrown from one of the last trains bound for Auschwitz, says the New York Times.

"It is Wednesday afternoon," she read. "They have packed us in and we are going. God be with you, my dear family." Then the train was turned back at Admiral Horthy's intercession. But the reprieve lasted only a few days before Eichmann sent the Jews off again.

Mrs. Reich read another message sent by her husband from this train:

"I already threw one postcard out of the train. I am trying to write to you once again. No doubt we are out for a long journey and may God help us that we meet again. There was one miracle on Saturday and maybe God will help again We are sixty in one wagon. The destination is Germany. That is all we know I will try to bear my fate. I do not wish to make you sad but I do want to go on living with you. May God help us and this day come. Dear children, please take care of your mother."

Baron Freudiger, the stately, bearded Hungarian aristocrat, said Major Wisliceny had told him that Eichmann had celebrated and drunk toasts with Hungarian Fascist leaders when, in early 1944, they learned the Hungarian Government had consented to Eichmann's proposals for deportations of Hungarian Jews. The plans were to move 12,000 Jews a day on four trains.

The Baron said he had been told by another Eichmann deputy, Maj. Hermann Krumey, that the Jews were being sent to Germany for labor. For a while, he said, postcards reached Budapest in the handwriting of the deportees saying they were in good health and working, says the New York Times. However, the messages were so uniform that the Jewish leaders became suspicious.

The Baron studied the postmarks and concluded they had been altered. He said he confronted Krumey and was told, "You shouldn't observe things you aren't supposed to see."

Baron Freudiger said Wisliceny had helped him to escape to Rumania after warning him that Eichmann hated him. Asked if he could recognize Eichmann, the Baron took a long look at the defendant and said:

"In my memory lives the image of the oberaturmbannfuehrer (the lieutenant colonel) in a smart uniform, standing with his legs astride, his hand on his pistol holster, shouting at me from the heights of his 'master race,' but nevertheless I do think that is he."

Baron Pinhas von Freudiger, an elderly, dignified man whose family had been ennobled by Emperor Franz Josef, opened testimony on the Hungarian episode. The Baron wore the skull cap of the Jewish devout and declined to take an oath on religious grounds.

Baron von Freudiger recalled in detailed, scholarly fashion, that Jews led fairly secure lives in Hungary during the relative prosperity of the Nineteen-Twenties. He said that taints of anti-Semitism were detected in a few laws passed in the Nineteen-Thirties that seemed to be aimed at the economic power of the Jews.

But, the Baron added, blatant anti-Semitism did not appear until Hungary annexed portions of Czechoslovakia, Rumania, and Yugoslavia before and during World War II and found that her Jewish population, as a result of these acquisitions, had jumped from 500,000 to 800,000.

Citizenship was denied to Jews from the annexed regions, he recalled, and in 1941 the Budapest regime tried to drive thousands of these stateless Jews into German-occupied Galicia and even into the Ukraine. The Baron said that 12,000 Jews had been massacred at Kamenets-Podolski in the Ukraine.

Up to that time the "Magyarized" Jews, many of whom were converts to Christianity, had been untouched, the Baron said. His own family, he added, had excellent contacts with the ruling circles of Hungary.

The first measure against Magyar Jews, the Baron testified, was conscription of Jewish youth for labor service with the military forces. As Hungarian troops moved eastward to garrison-occupied areas in the rear of German armies invading the Soviet Union the labor units, then increased to 50,000, moved with them.

This conscription was carried out under a law that said that persons of "questionable loyalty" could be called up for forced labor, Baron von Freudiger recalled, says the New York Times. He said that Jewish leaders had protested to the regime of Admiral Nicholas Horthy and had been told that the measure was necessary to "take the wind out of the sails" of anti-Semites and Germans who had been pressuring Budapest for severe anti-Jewish laws.

The Baron said that the day after the German Army had occupied Hungary he and fourteen other Jewish leaders were summoned to meet Nazi officers. Maj. Hermann Krumey, an aide in Eichmann's Jewish Affairs Office, told them: "As of this moment all Jewish affairs are within the competence of the S.S. (Elite Guard)."

The Baron said that arrests had started almost immediately after the German Army occupation, with a round-up of anti-Nazi journalists and others. On the second night, he said, several hundred prominent Jews were detained, including industrialists and bankers.

Hundreds of other Jews attempting to flee the city were seized in raids on railroad stations, the Baron added.

There were also accounts given of courageous actions and bold negotiations to save the doomed Jews, along with sad stories from people who were put aboard the extermination transports but managed to escape the gas chambers in the end.

All through the testimony there ran a connecting thread which tied Eichmann to the major actions described by the witnesses, a predominantly Hungarian-speaking audience of 750 spectators. They were able not only to understand the testimony given in the Hungarian and German languages, but the emotional state of the witnesses was quickly and uncannily communicated to the audience.

The basic testimony of this session, opening up grevious wounds, was given by Dr. Pinhas von Freudiger, a member of an old, wealthy and influential Jewish textile manufacturing family of Budapest, says the New York Times. He had been testifying about a shocking report he had received from a rabbi deported to the Auschwitz camp, telling about the exterminations, and about postcards that had come from the deportation train carrying children to Auschwitz. He had said that

This touched off an outburst of hysterics. It came at 10.25 in the morning, when a middle-aged Hungarian Jewish man — fat, bald, small, and otherwise inconspicuous in his gray suit, suddenly began shouting at the witness.

"You saved your families." "Mine was exterminated. And Dr. Reiner saved his family." Dr. Reiner was another leader of the Jewish community.

One of the principal points in Dr. Freudiger's testimony was aimed at showing that vast power was wielded by Eichmann in Hungary. This was done by showing first that Eichmann ordered 1,500 Jews sent from the concentration camp near Budapest to Auschwitz in Poland.

The Baron heard about it, and he and his friends intervened. The result was that the train was returned to the camp without crossing the border. But two days later Dr. Freudiger, along with other Jewish leaders, was summoned to a meeting and kept waiting by a man named Hunsche, who indicated he wanted to discuss Jewish matters in general.

Instead, however, the Jewish group had to wait from 10.30 a.m. until 7 p.m., when Hunsche got a telephone call. After hanging up the receiver, he said, "Now you can go."

Afterwards they found that Eichmann had arranged for them to be there so that he could start the returned train out again on its journey to Auschwitz, without the Jewish leaders knowing. The phone call was to tell Hunsche that the train had passed the border.

Eichmann's deputy, Dieter Wisliceny, afterwards hanged as a war criminal, later told the witness: "What did this old fool (Nicholas Horthy, the Regent of Hungary) think? — that Eichmann will keep quiet when a train of his is brought back?"

At another point in the witness' testimony he touched on the Kastner negotiations — one of the really sore issues in Israel. This involved Dr. Reszoe Kastner, former secretary of the Budapest Zion Relief Association, who was later murdered in Israel, says the New York Times. He was active in Jewish rescue negotiations with the Nazis, negotiations which were sharply criticized by many Jews afterwards.

The testimony touched on a number of fringe aspects of the Kastner negotiations without going into the essential heart of the complex case. The Kastner proposals involved a suggested exchange of Jews for 10,000 trucks for German Army use. The witness testified about conversations he had in this connection, indicating that while Eichmann was trying to trick the Jews, the witness was leading Eichmann to believing he already had lined up 250 trucks toward the 10,000.

Another key document which was explained through this witness was a report made by the Rabbi Weissmandel, who was trying to rouse the world outside to the fact that the Germans were actually trying to exterminate the Jewish people and describing the gas chambers of Auschwitz.

The witness said that an effort was made to get the Allies to bomb the bridges over which the Auschwitz transports traveled, and that maps, plans and schedules were supplied. But nothing materialized in the end.

In the cross-examination by Dr. Robert Servatius, the defense lawyer laid down his new line on the Hungarian situation. That is the defense contention that much, if not most, of the Jewish deportations from Hungary were actually carried out by the Hungarian officials and gendarmeries, even if a few German officers supervised the activities.

One of the most gruesome accounts of actions in Hungary was given by a witness named Zev Sapir, a husky young man who was twenty years old when he was put in a concentration camp that was visited by Eichmann, he said.

This witness told of a death march in which he participated, says the New York Herald Tribune. About 1,000 persons began the march when a labor camp in which they were working was moved to the rear of the retreating German front. After telling how the stragglers were shot down mercilessly and how he became a member of a group of 200 who were left behind to be picked up by trucks, he described how the Germans put them in a coal miner's barracks where they expected to be fed.

The Germans brought into the place a big soup kettle, but it turned out to be empty. Then one by one they called up the death marchers, stuck their heads into the empty soup kettle and shot them in the base of the skull. Only eleven men remained to be shot when a higher ranking officer came into the place and called off the massacre, he testified.

Baron Freudiger's first visit to Eichmann's was, the witness said, to get back the books of the Torah which had been taken from the Jews of Budapest. He said that Eichmann told him, "All right, I will see to it," and the sacred scrolls, sure enough, were returned.

At his next meeting sometime in April the Jews had heard that the Nazis were concentrating Jews in the border areas and that Jews were being plundered and robbed of money, and he went to see Herman Krumey, of the SS Jewish Emigration Office, about this. He said:

"The secretary didn't let us wait inside so we were waiting outside and then Obersturmbannfuehrer Eichmann turned up. I knew him already. He told us, 'What are you doing, my dear boys?' I said, 'We are waiting for Obersturmbannfuehrer Krumey.' He said, 'All right, kindly step into our office.'

"There we saw a very big map of Hungary on the wall. We stood in front of this map. It showed the border districts. Eichmann said he had instructed that the Jews living in the border areas be brought into the ghettos. This affected 310,000 Jews. He continued his discourse, saying that the Russians are standing on the other side of the Carpathians and it is absolutely impossible to leave 300,000 foes moving about freely in areas so near to the frontier, says the New York Herald Tribune. "Therefore it was absolutely indispensable to concentrate them in the ghettos."

The witness pointed out that the particular area that had been

Jan Peerce Keeps 1956 Moscow Promise In New York

A promise made to an American rabbi by a Metropolitan Opera tenor, while they were in Moscow, in 1956, was fulfilled at the Metropolitan Synagogue of New York, 40 E. 35th Street, when Jan Peerce gave a concert of operatic, Hebrew, liturgical and Yiddish folk music at the temple.

How he came to do it goes back to July, 1956, according to the Rev. Dr. Judah Cahn, Rabbi. At that time, Dr. Cahn, acting in his capacity as professor of humanities at Springfield, Mass., College, was invited to the University of Moscow for faculty consultation on minority group problems.

On the day he arrived, he found that Mr. Peerce had appeared the evening before. "It was more than a musical event," Dr. Cahn said in New York to the Herald Tribune. "As part of his program, Mr. Peerce presented Hebrew liturgical numbers as well as Yiddish folk songs. His program proved to be the means of recharging the Jewish community with new hope and increased consciousness of their heritage."

In addition to the concert, Mr. Peerce appeared at the Moscow synagogue. It was packed. The singer, who is the son of a cantor, volunteered to act as cantor. The effect was electrifying, according to Dr. Cahn, for here was a great artist "who cared enough to participate in the religious life of his people."

"To the Jews of Moscow, who had been led to believe that such a thing was no longer possible, this was a miracle before their very eyes," the rabbi related. He invited Mr. Peerce to share the platform with him in New York.

from side to side. "Un-be-lievable," he said, "simply unbelievable."

"And simply wonderful, too," said Borah, "when you stop to think of it. Every committee is useful and important, and on every committee there are from five to twenty-five members. That must mean that every single member of our Congregation is on at least one committee."

"Unfortunately no," said Abel. "I happen to be on the Board of Directors and we took the matter up. We have three hundred and fifty heads of families — "

"Three hundred and sixty-two," said Borah. "I happen to be on the Membership Committee."

Abel gestured impatiently. "I bow my head to the ground to you," he said. "You are on the Membership Committee. A few more, a few less, what difference does it make? I'm talking about a principle."

"Pardon me for living," said Borah.

"We have three hundred and fifty heads of families—" Abel paused and let his defiance sink in. "We have three hundred and fifty heads of families in the membership and only two hundred-odd are on committees. That's why there's so much doubling up. That's why you, for instance, have to serve on nine committees, not because you are such a big shot. There are some members who are slackers. They simply don't exist when it comes to shul business."

"So what was the conclusion of the Board of Directors?" asked Pincus. He sensed that the discussion was almost at an end and took a surreptitious look at his cards. The arithmetic wheels in his head began to turn.

"The conclusion was," said Abel, "that something has got to be done to get wider participation on committees.

"Brilliant," said Borah.

Abel ignored him ostentatiously. "So we did something about it."

"What did you do?" asked Pincus. A bid of four hundred was on his face.

"We organized a committee."

Borah roared with laughter. "I can't believe you are serious," he gasped when he had quieted down a bit. "What kind of a committee? And how will you get someone to serve on it?

"Members of this new committee we got already. Their function will be to induce members of the Congregation who are not now members of any committees to participate in committee work. The Chairman and the Vice-Chairman of the Board of Directors will constitute the new committee."

"And what are you calling this committee?" asked Pincus.

"What should it be called?" said Abel. "The Committee Committee. What else?"

STAR TIME (2)

Last week we told you about Tommy Ambrose, one of the top stars who are available to play your next big event.

This week we're going to talk about a prodigy — a swinging seventeen-year-old called Paul Heffert.

Paul is a jazz musician, but don't let that scare you. He's happiest with an up-tempo swing tune, but he knows his way around not only the piano, but the bass, the drums, and the vibraphone, too.

He's done half a dozen big TV dates, his first longplay album is a steady seller. If you're young in heart, you'll dig him the most.

Paul's just another part of the entertainment available by calling us.

Odd Man Out: Where Is Father Today? Being A Man In His Own Home?

BY DAVID WEISS, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF BARON DE HIRSCH INSTITUTE AND THE JEWISH CHILD WELFARE BUREAU OF MONTREAL

Are modern fathers of today's families conspicuous by their absence in the intimate processes of family life? Is father, for various reasons to be stated, low man on the family totem-pole today? Is it his fault, or a combination of factors which have created new forms of family living in which fathers are usually seen, but not heard in the human relationships of the family group?

According to the "experts", Papa has had to take second spot in the family's emphasis on the needs of children and mothers. This emphasis has been so much on meeting the emotional and psychological needs of children and mothers, that Papa seems to have been left behind to carry up the rear (and sometimes almost forgotten except on moving days, or when it comes to paying bills or extricating the children from the neighbours' complaints). True, Papa must commute increasingly further distances from his suburban home to the office or go on business deals all over the country, if not over the world. He has to, not only to keep up with the Joneses, but as Alice said, he has to run twice as fast to stay in the same (solvent) place!

Mama has become the "he — she", or two-in-one head of the family in the often avoidable and the unavoidable absences of Papa.

Moreover, Papa and his family are not living with relatives in an extended and settled neighbourhood where, if he should be away hunting or cutting timber or on a special round-up, there are uncles, or grandfathers or other father-figures to step in and carry his role. In short, who will keep Papa's seat "warm" at the family table if he is away today?

And, alas, in today's industrialized and highly specialized commercial world, Papa is often a mere cog on the industrial team or a sole committee member with very little outlet for his assertiveness or natural masculine aggressiveness. A man has to flex his emotional and physical muscles to keep in trim as a man!

Can he "express" himself at home, when he comes in tired from driving through traffic, from the pressures and attrition of conformity, of committee meetings, etc., to really try to assert himself without being made to feel that he is either a "hostile" character, a "failure" as a therapist, a misanthrope, or just somebody who happens to be a boarder (and an inconvenient one, at that)?

There is no doubt that the patterns of family living today are quite distinct from those of our grandparents and their grandparents. The family of today is usually an isolated nuclear unit, supposedly self-sufficient, without immediate and deep roots with relatives and friends who grow up from one generation to the other in the same neighbourhood, in the same fields of work and with traditions of sharing and experiencing family and social situations that have durability, and that can be easily understood and learned by young and old alike.

Moreover, modern education and other social theories have reinforced the "rights" of the children and the mother to the point where they have been emancipated as co-equal partners in the family structure and procedures of living. Some experts state that mothers and children are more dominant, and domineering, than fathers and husbands ever were!

Fathers today cannot pattern themselves easily on the authoritarian, sovereign-like roles of their parents and grandparents. Who then in the community should the father take after? The private-eye hero of the T.V. drama or comic strip, the local minister or rabbi, the city mayor, the corporate businessman whose own activities may not always be of highest ethical order, or who? And if father cannot find healthy exemplars in the community or in his work how can he serve as a proper exemplar for his own children, for their own ideal and developmental needs?

It is true that fathers, like mothers and children, are busy playing many and varied roles in modern living unlike those in the past. This adds to the stress and strain on father, as much as on his other relatives, is this possibly why father comes home to hide behind his newspaper and/or T.V. programmes? Or is he in the finished basement working away busily at his hobbies and in his craftshop in order to avoid inter-personal contacts and relationships for fear that he either will not be welcome or, having abdicated his rightful place in the responsibilities of the home, afraid that he may not come up with the perfect answers that fathers are supposed to have as the alleged heads of their families?

The characteristics of the family of the 20th century in North America are still being refined and defined in the processes of social change. In an urbanized society, individuals and families are interdependent with others about and around them, and others who are unknown to them and yet on whom everyone depends for food, distribution of commodities, and services and so on. Papa and his family have to find their places in this distribution and consumer system, and at the same time define the necessary and balanced roles which each play.

The most important role father plays is both biologically and socially determined, that is, he must be a man, first and foremost. Many forces in society defeat men as men, and the outlets and sublimations substituted for such expression do not always come up to men's expectations nor are these necessarily the healthiest forms. Men need to be restored to equality in their own families, and society has a direct responsibility for re-emphasizing the rights, the privileges as well as the responsibilities of fathers in the modern family.

The modern father must not only be the defender, the sire, and the provider of his family, but an equal partner, perhaps first among equals, in making the home and sustaining it through its various vicissitudes, its victories, and its defeats. He must also recognize that he cannot participate as an equal partner through absentee management, nor can mothers and wives and children expect fathers only to come to the aid of the family or themselves during periods of crises.

In fact, all of modern psychiatry and psychology emphasizes the need for fathers to be rediscovered and restored to their proper place in the family group, if children are to grow into healthy personalities with recognition of the differences and responsibilities between a man and a woman and for them to make later successful adjustments in adult life and in marriage and family living.

Fathers are manly for biological and psychological reasons, and need to be so. Without fathers there could be no homes, and no worthwhile families. There is still no substitute in chemistry or in science for Papa. But Papa must want to be a man and to express and participate as a man within his home and family group and in the community. The best way to start is by men being themselves and re-asserting themselves, accepting the fact that they may not always be perfect or right, but this is the satisfying right and privilege of being a husband, a father, and a man in his own home.

newly affected was 300 miles from the frontier, but Eichmann snapped back at him, "Ask your Hungarians. All this is an area under the supervision of the 3rd Brigade of the Hungarian Army and is to be regarded as border area."

"Then I was at a loss to answer," Baron Freudiger testified. "Eichmann continued, 'They have to be there because we must look after peace and order and we must see to it that there are no epidemics. Here in places where there are no ghettos we have to see to it that there is order and that there should be no epidemics.' Then one of our colleagues asked how could we possibly look after hygiene if the means at our disposal are so limited?

"Then Eichmann began shouting again. Until then he had spoken rather politely. He said, 'Again you start this propaganda. Who told you? Who told you that?'"

The witness added that Eichmann continued, "'All right, if you have parents, let them come to Budapest.' And Krumey said that an order would be given to bring the families of all the members of the Judenrat (Jewish Council), that the first degree families would be brought to Budapest."

Baron Freudiger said that he asked Eichmann what he meant by the term "first degree," and Eichmann answered, "Even that you don't know? That means to say either a husband or wife or parents or children. Second degree relatives includes brothers and sisters," Eichmann explained, says the New York Times. The witness testified that the first deportation of Jews from Hungary took place at the beginning of April, 1944, and these Jews were taken to a camp called Kistarcsa about nine miles from Budapest.

The deportations continued into the first week of July, he testified, and during this period "about 600,000 Jews were deported, in my opinion." The witness gave a long and detailed explanation of the step-by-step anti-Jewish measures that were put into effect. In the course of his testimony he gave a vivid picture of Eichmann's deputy, Dieter Wisliceny, who was later hanged as a war criminal.

Baron Freudiger said frankly that, "I must say I always preferred to contact Wisliceny," and that Wisliceny once told him that Eichmann was angry at both Wisliceny and at himself, the witness, because in discussions earlier in which the Jewish leaders had dickered with Wisliceny over the possibility of ransoming all the Jews for $3,000,000 worth of goods. Eichmann had complained that this figure was "klein geld" — pocket money. The witness explained:

"Yes, Wisliceny told me that when I started to negotiate to save the Jews of Hungary — 1,000,000 people for two or three million dollars — that they had already struck a bargain with another family of only thirty-two souls for the sum of tens of millions of dollars."

Then he described a deal said to have been made by the Manfred Weiss family. He testified: "This was the famous deal with the Baron Weiss family who handed over all their property part of which was already non-Jewish property, through Becher to Himmler."

Becher was one arm of Himmler's two-arm operation in Hungary — Becher handled the plundering of Jewish property, or the so-called economic affairs of the Jewish problem and Eichmann the shipping off of the Jews to the extermination camps, or the transport side, according to the prosecution's roster of Nazi figures.

Baron Freudiger testified that the Weiss family had property on a big island near Budapest in the Danube River and there was a large munitions factory and farms on the place along with a population of 30,000, says the New York Herald Tribune. He said that the family handed over the entire property to the S.S., if not to Himmler personally, in return for letting thirty-two members of the family go to Stuttgart by train and from there to freedom in Portugal by private plane.
